

“Attack the money. Make it big and bloody, and fear will follow in its wake,” Tariq tells his paymasters, and they know that he is a man who always delivers on his promises. What begins as an ordinary day is transformed as London faces a spectacular co-ordinated attack designed to create widespread terror and haemorrhage away the financial life blood of the city. With the lens of the media focused on events, people watch with fascination and horror as efforts are made to save the lives of those caught up in the ensuing mayhem, whilst behind the scenes the Security Services race against time to identify those responsible for the outrage. A task made more frustrating as their political overlords demand instant answers, and the evidence crumbles around them. At the same time, two men form an unlikely partnership in order to survive amidst the devastation. Confronted with unimaginable obstacles and challenges, each man still finds time to examine their motivation for survival, to reflect on their life and the circumstances that have brought them to be where they are. The question that hangs over everything is, who is a friend and who is the enemy, and who will pay the price for all that has happened?
