

Sweet Spot: A Novel About Mazatlan Carnival, Dirty Politics, and Baseball

If anybody wondered why star journalist Mundo Carrasco would stop investigating Mazatlans drug lords and politicians in order to run the shady new puppet mayors press relations, then they had never been to bed with the scorching, amoral, monumental Mijares. Mazatlans huge, blaring Carnival became the greatest time Mundo had lived since his days as a local baseball hero: access to the real power and closeted skeletons, a political future of his own, and...mostly...the perfect flesh of Mijares. Then the mayor beats up his wife, the city government starts to unravel into scandal and panic, and they start killing people--with Mundo right up there on their list. Tumbling through the tumult of Carnival, mob violence, narco suites and wretched bulldozed hovels, musical mayhem, his own corruption, and three women who want to reclaim his soul for his own good and their own purposes, Mundo is either sorting himself out or getting totally mixed up...if he comes out of it with his damaged scruples and bruised hide intact. Linton Robinson is a veteran award-winning journalist and author of several popular books on Mexican culture. His work is very much affected by the decades he has lived in various parts of Mexico and Central America. Sweet Spot is a valentine to the eight years he lived on a hill right above the throbbing heart of Mazatlans carnival celebration, wrote for local newspapers, and hung out with the local musicians, athletes, and criminals. Editorials Politics are murder for basepath journalist during Mazatlans riotous Carnival. Mexican Gorky Park...with baseball and table dancers! Mazatlan politics turn Carnival into carnage for basepath journalist Mundo Carrasco. A beautiful, amoral revolutionary sucks batting champ/journalist Mundo Carrasco into a web of political murder during the peak of Mazatlans Carnival. Batting champ Mundo Carrasco becomes Mazatlans top journalist but loses his beautiful, amoral love to revolutionary murder during Carnival.
